First Year Scout Specific Information

For First Year Scouts, they will more than likely need a camp box. These are boxes used to store & secure valuables and clothes under lock in the tent. They should be able to fit under their cots. There are a couple of businesses in town, which have these available, and they are listed below. Plastics models could also be used, but may not last as long as the more sturdy wooden ones. In addition, they will also need a lock for the box, preferable a combination one.

There is also a swim test the first day of camp. This is used to determine the Scouts swimming ability. It is done under supervision, and consists of swimming 100 yds using various swimming strokes. If the scouts pass this test, they are allowed in the deep end of the pool during swim times. If not, they're only allowed in the shallow end of the pool. This is still sufficient to cool off if it's hot. They also can also retest at later times if they would like to.

Canteen's or water bottles are also popular. The leaders will maintain water coolers with both cold Gatorade and ice water in the campsite. It's easiest to simply fill the bottles as the Scouts head out to merit badge classes.

A small battery powered fan, available at stores like Target or Wal-Mart can make sleeping more comfortable during hotter sessions.

Pre-requisites for merit badge classes are very important. If they're completed prior to arriving at camp, there is a greater possibility of the Scout completing the merit badge while at camp. If not, they'll have to complete the requirements back at home, and then schedule time with a merit badge counselor to have them sign off on it.
